

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS OF THE NAVAL RESERVE IN CANADA

NATIONAL BAND OF THE NAVAL RESERVE

A photograph of a band in uniform marching. They are wearing dark blue uniforms with white belts and hats. Many musicians are playing brass instruments like trumpets and tubas. In the background, several white flags with blue and red markings are visible against a dark sky.

ODE TO NEWFOUNDLAND

For 100 years, the Naval Reserve has played a critical role in Canada's safety and security as a vital element of the Royal Canadian Navy and Canadian Armed Forces.

During 2023, please join us in recognizing the Naval Reserve Centennial and our important contribution to our nation's military history and heritage.

Today, the Naval Reserve has a strength of over 4100 sailors across 24 Naval Reserve Divisions, including His Majesty's Canadian Ship (HMCS) Cabot in St. John's, Newfoundland and Labrador. Modern-day Naval Reservists typically serve on a part-time basis, but consistently answer the call to support international operations worldwide and domestic operations here at home.

HMCS Cabot became the 21st Naval Reserve Division on September 20, 1949. It is the home of the Royal Canadian Navy in Newfoundland—the successor to HMCS Avalon, one of the most important naval bases of the Second World War.
