For 100 years, the Naval Reserve has played a critical role in Canada's safety and security as a vital element of the Royal Canadian Navy and Canadian Armed Forces. During 2023, please join us in recognizing the Naval Reserve Centennial and our important contribution to our nation's military history and heritage.

Today, the Naval Reserve has a strength of over 4100 sailors across 24 Naval Reserve Divisions, including His Majesty's Canadian Ship (HMCS) Brunswicker in Saint John, New Brunswick. Modern-day Naval Reservists typically serve on a part-time basis, but consistently answer the call to support international operations worldwide and domestic operations here at home.

HMCS Brunswicker became the tenth Naval Reserve Division on June 20, 1923. It was New Brunswick's main recruiting and training establishment for the Royal Canadian Navy during the Second World War.
